The film explores issues of mass incarceration, social justice, racism, inequality, violence, drug addiction, rehabilitation, forgiveness, and redemption. It has earned “Best Humanitarian Documentary” at the 2022 Sedona International Film Festival, “Best Documentary” at the 2021 Brooklyn Film Festival, and an Audience Choice Award for Best Documentary at the 2021 New Hope Film Festival. DRAWING EXPERIMENTS with John O’Connor,
Visual and Studio Arts Faculty
Heimbold 305
This workshop will introduce participants to a variety of creative drawing approaches and materials through open–ended prompts. As context, we’ll discuss several contemporary approaches to drawing through an image presentation. Then, participants will choose from several diverse drawing prompts that move between representation and abstraction. Participants will use the materials provided to explore their own interests through these prompts, discussing and sharing their work as they go.

FINDING HAPPINESS AND KEEPING IT with Maia Pujara, Psychology Faculty
Heimbold 208

Amid an ongoing pandemic for which the full repercussions have yet to be understood, about four in ten adults in the U.S. have reported symptoms of anxiety or depressive disorder—an increase from one in ten adults who reported these symptoms from January to June 2019 (Census Bureau’s Household Pulse Survey, 2021). Therefore, this is a critical time to learn about what we can intentionally do every day to sustain longterm well-being (“happiness”), over and above the genetic and circumstantial factors that determine our capacity for experiencing happiness. Positive Psychology is an emerging field that deals with the scientific study of behavioral interventions that can lead to the long–term maintenance of positive emotions and well–being. This seminar will involve brief examinations of these behaviors, accompanied by short activities to apply some of these behaviors during the session.
MALCOLM X AND THE STRANGE CAREER OF THE JIM CROW NORTH with Komozi Woodard, History Faculty Performing Arts Center, PAC 3

For decades the Cold War University encouraged scholars and students to seek the origins of Jim Crow racism in the South; however, Malcolm X and the Black Power movement pointed to the deep roots of racism in the Jim Crow North. A new generation of scholars discovered the origins of Jim Crow in New York City. New York City was the leading port city in the Atlantic Slave Trade. Above all, the Black Abolitionists and the Black Freedom Movement were headquartered in the Jim Crow North. The study of White Racism must examine the dynamics of slavery, emancipation, and the struggle for citizenship in the Jim Crow North to render a clear portrait of racial oppression in America. Malcolm X urged the student movement to rethink the roots of American Racism.

The park features a Walled Garden inspired by ancient Indo-Persian gardens, the Vista, the former Color Gardens, the Temple of Love, and the Rock and Stream Garden.

Session II: Seminars and Workshops
2–3:30 p.m.

AFRICAN AMERICAN POETRY AFTER EMANCIPATION with Elias Rodriques, Literature Faculty Titsworth Living Room
This seminar will investigate the Golden Shovel, a uniquely African American poetic form, through readings of Gwendolyn Brooks’ “We Real Cool” (1959) and Terrance Hayes’ “The Golden Shovel” (2010). In so doing, we hope to query what African American poetry’s relationship is to youth culture, what cultures sprang from the unique circumstances of the Black diaspora in America, and what those cultures have to say about the relationship between anti-blackness, violence, and freedom.

BORDER CROSSINGS: TRANSGRESSING LITERARY AND CULTURAL BOUNDARIES
A celebration and exploration of the work of faculty member Bella Brodzki ’72 Heimbold Visual Arts Center, Donnelley Theatre
Roundtable participants: Arnold Krupat, SLC Faculty Emeritus Literature; Sonia Werner ’00, faculty, NYU’s interdisciplinary master’s program; Christi Merrill, associate professor, Pulaski State University Department of English

Get started today at connect.slc.edu
Studying literature is not what it used to be. Have you noticed how today’s students are reading and viewing works that would never have appeared on a syllabus when you were at Sarah Lawrence? Literature courses frequently cross all sorts of boundaries—linguistic, cultural, geographic, and disciplinary. Does the expansion of the literary universe simply change what students read or is it changing how they read, how they see themselves, and how they think about their place in the world? Bella Brodzki ’72, a beloved SLC faculty member who recently retired, placed these questions at the heart of her teaching and scholarship. Her work as a comparatist on translation and cultural memory comprises investigations of aesthetics, ethics, politics, and poetics. This roundtable brings together a number of Bella’s colleagues to reflect on how works move from the margin to the center of our attention, and the contributions Bella has made to heightening understanding of why those moves matter.

GREEN INFRASTRUCTURE AND CLIMATE–RESILIENT CITIES with Bernice Rosenzweig, The OSilas Endowed Professorship in Environmental Studies, Heimbold 208
Green infrastructure has the potential to transform our cities—replacing asphalt and concrete with soil, vegetation, and watercourses. But while cities across the globe are now developing green infrastructure plans to protect water resources, enhance biodiversity, and provide urban amenities, there is an ongoing debate on what green infrastructure actually is. In this seminar, we’ll explore various definitions of ‘green infrastructure,’ the relationship between green infrastructure and natural ecosystems, and the resulting opportunities—and limitations—associated with the use of green infrastructure in making cities more resilient to climate change. Using New York City as a case study, we will also discuss the challenges associated with the broad implementation of green infrastructure in existing cities, along with ways that we as individuals can significantly contribute to making cities greener and more livable for all urban residents as we confront the climate crisis.
